Served Daily

The Knightley family, whose family home was Fawsley Hall for over 500 years, were marvellous entertainers.

Louisa Knightley (D. 1913) would take tea which was served on a raised plinth in the bay window of the Great Hall, overlooking the pasture and the Church of St. Mary.

The wonderful and quintessential English tradition of afternoon tea is credited to Anna, the Duchess of Bedford in the early 1800s. The Duchess grew hungry between the early lunch and late dinner and conceived the idea of a separate meal. This was served in her boudoir in the mid-afternoon to ward her off her own and her guest's hunger pangs.
